

ACCELERATIVE LEARNING

Wonder method or pseudo-scientific gobbledegook?

by Uschi Felix

Accelerative Learning is the definitive analysis of Suggestopedia and its major adaptations by a highly respected language education scholar. The author tackles the controversy surrounding the method in three important new ways:

- 1 by providing for the first time a detailed overview of the evolution of the method from Lozanov to the present day
- 2 by critically examining the claims made for the method in the entire body of research
- 2 by contributing three innovative investigations addressing important gaps in this research.

"Felix concludes that a great deal of pseudo-scientific gobbledegook has been promulgated about this method. However, her rigorous warts-and-all analysis also presents a substantial body of credible, valid evidence that should persuade us to take 'a second look at an approach whose core values echo what good language teachers have long embraced as pedagogically sound'. For this we should all be very grateful."

Joseph LoBianco, Professor of Language & Literacy, University of Melbourne.

Uschi Felix is the Director, Research Centre for New Media in Second Language Acquisition, School of Languages, Cultures and Linguistics, Monash University, Melbourne, Australia.
